Industry Nutrition Forum

MEMBERSHIP

The American Heart Association Industry Nutrition Forum (INF) convenes food system industry leaders with nutrition science and public health experts to collaboratively address critical challenges in the food system and promote sustainable nutrition security for all people and communities.

Offer more nutritious foods, reduce unhealthy foods, create communications that inspire healthy eating, and engage in practices that protect the environment — these are the actions needed to transform the food system.

FORUM MEMBERS

- Represent a broad range of food system activities, from the farm to the point of purchase.
- Support the AHA vision of sustainable nutrition security for all.
- Engage in meaningful cross-sector dialogue to foster understanding of the implications of research, policy and communications.
- Provide thought leadership across the food system.
- Advance collaborative action on critical challenges and opportunities.
- Fund the Mark Bieber Award annually for early investigators in nutrition research.

Stepping Stones for Food System Transformation

The INF engages in a collaborative process to create Stepping Stones for Food System Transformation:

- Explore current food system barriers to health, equity and sustainability.
- Prioritize challenges for which INF members and the AHA have complementary strengths and influence to contribute.
- Advance progress through dialogue, thought leadership and action.
